Bible Society Sunday

The story of Mary Jones and the founding of the British and Foreign Bible Society is most fascinating. That happened over a hundred years ago. But every year since branches of the Society in various parts of the Empire have held their annual meeting. Next Sunday Sept. 8, the Arrowwood Branch will hold its annual meeting in the Church of the Brethren at 11:30 a.m. The congregation of the United Church will join on the union service. Rev. H. D. Marr, the honored field secretary for Southern Alberta will give this address.

And this is a special year on its work. It was twenty-one years since Mr. Marr was sent to Alberta to do pioneer work for the Society. He opened the work with headquarters in Calgary. Since then the work has grown till there is a northern and southern Auxiliary with Bible Houses in Calgary and Edmonton.

Rev. J. H. Brubaker has for some years been president of the local branch. You will be assured of a splendid address on a most interesting topic and will have the opportunity of sharing in one of the greatest enterprises ever undertaken by the Christian Church.

SYNOPSIS

Camilla Hoyt, young and beautiful student in an art school, unconsciously sketches the head of a fellow student who she has been told was supposed to be drawing a Greek urn. The professor, looking at her sketch, and admiring the way Peter Anson, the boy whose head she sketched, criticizes her work before her. Afterward Camilla goes to the park, but to her surprise it is Peter who approaches her. In his actions he shows that Camilla secretly adores him. He makes a date to see her that evening but is soon forced to give up the romantic night club. It is far beyond his means to be so resolute to give up the theatre first and then to the night club where they meet some of Camilla's old school chums. Peter resolves not to take Camilla out again, because of the expense, but Camilla wonders why he did not ask her to go out again.

CHAPTER V.

Peter let himself into the ugly room which he shared with Gus Mason. He despised its blatant vulgarity, but he could not help admiring his artistic and imaginative eye locked beyond it to the beautiful studio suite that he would occupy some day and endure it. Gus hands were covered with great callous blisters. He wore a faded red suit jacket—Peter's—and smoked a briar pipe.

"This is a swell hour for you to be checkin' in," he reproached Peter. "Out with some skirt?"

"A girl," Peter corrected, hanging up his hat and coat.

"Another big shot? I suppose, since you didn't invite me to the party. If you'd take my advice popular everywhere Gus was an outsider—only Peter's friend, which tendered him a certain advantage.

"Cost you plenty, too, I'll bet," Gus commented reproachfully.

"Too much," Peter conceded. "But it was worth it."

"Is she going to finance you for a couple of years in Paris?"

"No—oh, no—I only meant that because she's rich, she can afford the money it cost me."

Gus snorted. "If you don't watch your step, you'll be falling for some dame and lose your balance completely. Well, c'mon, it's time we hit the road."

"I insist on waiting up for me, don't you, mama?" Peter grimed with good humor. "I appreciate your concern, but believe me I'm a big boy now and can take care of myself."

Camilla cut again, because of the expense, but Peter resolved to take Camilla out again, because of the expense, but Camilla wonders why he did not ask her to go out again.

(Now Go On With The Story)

ever she resolved to do a thing, she did it completely. Her latest resolution was to get into Art school. She had completely forgotten him and was devoting herself to her work. So when Professor Drake exhibited her work to the class as the best for the day, her trim was sweet. The moment was disturbed by the arrival of Peter, "What's the matter, Anson? Not keeping late hours, I hope?"

"No, keepin' soberly. 'My off day, I guess."

"Well, you can't afford to have many of those if you maintain your record. By the way, you are planning to compete for the Farsala scholarship awards? You're a real artist!"

"I planned to. What's the matter?"

"There can be no exception to the plan. I expect you to have an entry in the exhibit."

"I'll try for it."

"That's all right. There's nothing wrong. Anson. Is there anything I can do?"

Peter's head went up defiantly. "Thank you, sir. No, there's nothing you can do. I'll manage somehow."

"Even if I can't do anything in carrying you about the exhibit, let me know."

"Thanks. I'll do that." Peter escaped his quizzical inspection and swung through the entrance of the building into the hall which cut straight through to park toward the sea. He usually took the shorter way, and it was on one of the benches near the lime hedge that he had found Camilla several days before. She, not knowing that he passed that way often, had come there directly from class, to be alone and think what to do about Peter.

He found her there again. She was not crying this time, but even before he could make out the picture she made that he was afflicted with the black-tea blues again. Why a girl like Camilla should have any kind of blues was beyond his imagination. She had the world in her lap. Peter asked her just why. She didn't know what real trouble was, so the least difficult assumption was exaggerated proportion to her.

His step on the path startled her.

"Oh!" she exclaimed and flushed.

He had been standing too, seeing her in such a state, and had first looked together, but had had a moment to calm his violent reactions before she discovered him.

She smiled ruefully, "I'm this a favoring—reassuring sort of person."

"There is a public park, isn't it?" she retorted with a calmness that beat the furious beating of her heart which his sudden appearance had disturbed.

Always, she felt as if he were a threat to her, and she had to be careful to calm his violent reactions before she discovered him.

Don't Borrow a Paper

Anyone who reads this, and has in his hand a copy of this paper which he borrowed from a neighbor, should be careful. It is dangerous to borrow your neighbor's paper, and expensive too. Listen to this. A man who was too economical to subscribe to the paper sent his little son over to borrow his neighbor's paper. In haste the lad knocked over a $5 stand of bees and in two minutes looked like a warty squash. His cries reached his father, who ran to his assistance, and failing to notice a barbed wire fence ran into that, breaking it down, cutting a handful of flesh out of his anatomy and paying a $4.95 pair of trousers. The old cow took advantage of the hole in the fence and got into corn field and killed herself eating green corn. Hearing the racket the wife ran out, upset a five gallon churnful of rich cream into a basket of chicks, drowning the whole flock. Her hurry she dropped a $10 set of false teeth. The baby, left alone, crawled through the spilled milk and into the parlor and crawled a mile $25 run. During the excitement the eldest daughter ran away with the hired man, the dog broke up eleven setting hens and calves got out and chewed the tails off four fine shirts hanging on the line.—Walkerton Telescope.

Forty-three years of active, loyal, and efficient service with the Canadian Pacific Railway closed June 30 with the retirement of W. A. Kinnear, Vice-President Western Division, Chicago. He was succeeded by E. G. Carter, Assistant General Freight Agent, and the office which the latter vacated was abolished.

For the first time since its foundation, the Canadian National General of Canada was present at the annual closing exercises of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Shadwell, Que., recently, when the Earl of Bessborough, accompanied by W. A. Kinnear, Chairman and President, Canadian Pacific Railway, attended the school and awarded prizes to graduates.

"There are tangible signs of better times ahead," said the General of Canada and the United States," Sir Jostin Stanhope, Director of the London, Midland and Scottish Railway, and one of Britain's leading railway men, recently when he sailed for England on the Canadian Pacific liner via the route of Britain to a short visit to this continent.

Ten Honolulu youths between 14 and 17 years of age arrived yesterday from Vancouver on Canadian Airlines' liner "Empress of Canada" en route to the Yukon where they will spend the summer in scientific research and adventure. They will sail north to Skagway, go to White Horse where they will build a trail to the head of the Yukon River to Dawson.

Early Completion of Fall Work

With favorable weather the harvest and threshing will be completed much earlier this year than any year since we arrived in this district. This should give us all time to get together and plan as to what we can do to make Arrowwood a bigger and better place in the future. Wouldn't it be a good plan, after the work is done, to have a get together meeting and see if some local interest can be aroused?

If you need a new washing machine this fall you had better come in and see us about a Maytag, either electrically or power driven.

In cream separators we are agents for the Milka or the Renfrew, in the latter terms can be arranged on the easy payment plan.

We have been laid up a little with our truck on account of having to get a part from the East but it arrived today and we are again ready to haul anything anywhere anytime.

If you have trouble with belts in getting the hold, try our Clipper belt lacing. We have had more or less experience with belts for a third of a century and find that the Clipper belt lacing comes the nearest to doing the job of all the belt lacing on the market.
